

Don't Let Anxiety Control Your Life

Anxiety is familiar to everyone due to the many stresses and complexities of modern life, but about 25% of U.S. adults have a serious problem with anxiety that must be addressed at some time in their lives.

The following practices are helpful for anyone with anxiety and may be all that's needed if your level is mild and not disrupting your life. People with more severe anxiety, including anyone dealing with panic or post-traumatic stress symptoms, will still find the exercises helpful but also may need therapy and medication.

- Take Calming Breaths. This exercise quickly interrupts the momentum of anxiety symptoms. Breathing from your abdomen, inhale through your nose slowly to a count of five. Pause and hold your breath to a count of five. Exhale slowly to a count of five. Take two normal breaths, then repeat the cycle for three to five minutes.
- Stop Magnifying Problems. Exaggerating problems by making them seem bigger and more serious than they are can lead to anxiety. To combat this way of thinking, stop using words such as terrible, awful, or horrendous in relation to events or situations in your life. Instead of saying to yourself, "It's unbearable," or "I can't stand it," try saying, "I can cope" and "I can deal with this."
- Stop Worrisome Thoughts. Use this strategy if you feel stuck in a spiral of worrisome thoughts. "If you're alone and want to halt a chain of anxious thoughts, shout in a loud and forceful manner, 'Stop!' or 'Stop it!'" says Dr. Bourne. "If you're with other people, shout internally as you visualize a large stop sign." Repeat this every time the worrisome thought returns.
- Shift your Point of View. When anxiety or worry about an actual or possible problem is getting the best of you, try thinking about the situation in the following ways: 1) Tell yourself you can lighten up about it 2) Say the affirmation, "This, too, shall pass."
- Combat Negative Self-Talk. Positive affirmation can help you cope in the moment and over the long-term by helping you change long-standing beliefs, which tend to enable anxiety. To make your thoughts more constructive and supportive, replace or refute each negative statement. For example, replace "This is unbearable" with "I can learn to cope with this."

"Resisting or fighting anxiety is likely to make it worse," says Dr. Bourne. "A more constructive approach is to cultivate an attitude that says, 'OK, here it is again. I can handle this. I've done it before. Anxiety often peaks and subsides in a few minutes and will pass."
